Appendix: General Information

What are Cookies ?

Cookies are used to remember the information such as for logging in websites if the log-in process is required, recording which pages were accessed, or items in the shopping cart in an online store or to record the user's browsing activity. For example, when you visit a website's login page, the server of the website sends a cookie, small piece of data, and your computer stores it. When you log in, the server remembers the cookie and allow you to access the webpages. Cookies can be used to remember information about you in order to show you relevant content that you accessed several times. Many websites use cookies for providing information you may be interested in based on your preferences. You select your preferences by entering your information in a web form and submitting the form to the server. The server encodes the preferences in a cookie and sends the cookie back to the browser. This way, every time you access a page on the website, the server can personalize the page according to your preferences.

Type of Cookies

There are several cookies used for certain purposes. Session cookies are used for navigation of webpages and be deleted by closing the browser. Persistent cookies are used as ways to compile records of browsing history. The lifespan of persistent cookies/ tracking cookies is set arbitrarily. These cookies are reset if expiration time is reached or you delete the cookie manually. Secure cookies can only be transmitted by an encrypted connection, HTTPS. Third-party cookies are used to build up a browsing history of the user across all the websites that have advertisements from the advertiser. Currently, we are using session cookies and persistent cookies such as to maintain the website ("Necessary Cookie") or to optimize the website according to your choice ("Functionality Cookie") or for the analytical purpose ("Analytical Cookie") * on our website. There are several websites available to learn more about cookies. Following are examples of the websites describe cookies.

*Necessary Cookie is needed for the operation of the website and to give you all the necessary functions (e.g., to identify trusted web traffic)

*Functionality Cookie is used to record information about choices you have made, in order to customize the website for you.

*Analytical Cookie is used for internal purposes such as the better understanding of how visitors use our website. This helps us to make an improvement on our website and offer better experience on our website.
